

NASW Announces its 2014 Media Award Winners

National Association of Social Workers announced winners of the 2014 NASW Media Awards. The recipients include documentary filmmakers, television producers, bloggers, newspaper reporters, columnists and other media professionals who helped spotlight social work services and critical social issues in 2013.

“Our Social Work Month theme was ‘All People Matter’ and the winners of this year’s media award certainly reflect that,” NASW CEO, Angelo McClain, PhD, LICSW said. “The award recipients, through their work in print, TV, blogs and other media, demonstrated to the public some of the many ways social workers help people overcome life’s challenges and succeed.”

Social workers and the public nominated newspaper articles, newspaper columns, magazines and/or magazine stories, websites, blogs, radio segments, television news programs, fictional television programs, reality television programs, commercial films and documentaries for the awards program. More than 1,350 people visited the website SocialWorkersSpeak.org - an NASW site that tracks how social workers are portrayed in the media - to cast their votes for 47 nominees.

Among this year’s recipients is Social Justice Solutions for Best Website. Our heartfelt congratulations to our social work colleagues Matt Cohen, MSW, CEO and Courtney Kidd, LMSW, COO, Co-Founders of SJS; they and their staff are harnessing social media to put the Power of Social Work into ACTION!

Best Website

A social worker conceived and operated organization born out of the Stony Brook School of Social Welfare’s commitment to active participation in creating a socially just world.

Click here to learn more about the 2014 Media Awards:

<https://www.socialworkers.org/pressroom/2014/041014.asp>